softwareMaternal nurturing and nurturance-related traits affect motor development in preterm infants. Motor development is a critical outcome variable of preterm infants. The goal of the present study was to examine the relationships among maternal nurturance, the baby's preterm status, and motor development. A multiple regression analysis revealed that maternal nurturing and nurturance-related personality traits (ie, self-efficacy, satisfaction with the pregnancy, and support from friends and family) independently predicted higher motor abilities at 12 months corrected age. This implies that supportive mothers may have greater efficacy in promoting their children's development. Serena Williams has to rule: Women want it all Dec 06, 2014, 15:21 IST | Agencies In the grand arena of WTA tennis, No. 1-ranked Serena Williams appears to be the trump card. Since her break out in 2001, the precocious Williams, thanks to a disciplined, well-oiled and well-coordinated game, has dominated the women's tennis field like no one before her. Tennis authorities across the globe look upon Williams' accomplishments with great pride and often wonder what it would take for another giant to step up on the WTA landscape. "Serena has got such an appetite for winning, which has helped her grow as a person. It's just that common sense to us," said

Sania Mirza, the 2014 WTA Player of the Year. “In a way, other women look at her as someone who has her own way of reaching a tennis match or a desired target.” In her 17th year on the WTA circuit, Williams has reached a career-high ranking of world No. 1 and not lost a match since September 2010. She currently sits atop the 2012-13 season’s list of Grand Slam winners after she defeated world No. 2 Maria Sharapova at the Australian Open last month. The 19-time Grand Slam winner, who has won the U.S. Open seven times since 2001, is the undisputed Queen of the Decade and among the most recognizable tennis names in the world. “Serena has gone from being a very good player to becoming absolutely astonishing,” said

Anna Kournikova, the 1998 WTA Player of the Year. “In the last couple of years, she has become a true icon
