In the preceding chapter, I talk about editing and modifying images using the GIMP, which is the GNU Image Manipulation Program, a free (as in freedom) software alternative to Photoshop. This chapter focuses solely on the Photoshopping in Photoshop, but you can learn a lot from the GIMP and use it for other image-editing tasks. Creating and Manipulating Layers Photoshop is a program designed to create, manipulate, and show images. It uses raster images, which are collections of pixels that are either black and white or color. These pixels are arranged in rows and columns and stored in a file with a.psd extension. You have to know the difference between the Photoshop file format and the file format used to store raster images. Different files hold different information. A scanned photo file can contain a variety of information, including the places where color was captured, color at the edges of the scene, and color gradations between the foreground and background. Imagine a file without color! The computer uses the information in the file to create a raster image. The raster image has a bitmap look — pixels that are either on or off, black or white, and so on. I think of raster images as digital photographs. Figure 13-1 shows an image created from different layers. This image represents two layers: one that shows a mountain road and another that shows a forest. This layered image is known as a smart object. Illustration by Wiley, Composition Services Graphics Figure 13-1: A layered image. When you create a layered image, you can create a composite, or collage, of both images. When you use layers, you can move or manipulate the layers to change the information in the picture and/or combine the layers into a single image. For example, you can take the road layer and make it appear to go into the woods layer. See the sidebar "Moving a layer using the Move tool" for more information. The following sections explain how to create layers and layers and how to combine them into a single picture. Creating a new layer To create a new layer, follow these steps: 1. Choose Layer?New Layer to open the dialog box shown in Figure 13-2. Notice that the dialog box says Layer Masks. This shows that you can create layer masks, which are discussed in the

Editing images on a daily basis isn't a very good idea when it comes to using elements like color or photo-editing in many cases. Elements like this can be more of a design tool. Editing each frame of the animation may not be such a good idea either, so you should definitely come up with a plan before editing, or you may end up wasting a lot of time. Prior to the event, the librarians who guided participants through the immersive nature of the exhibition said a good number of people felt it was too hard. Despite the challenges, 62% of people felt it met their expectations. Perhaps the first real challenge was to navigate the exhibition space. All the practical puzzles and activities in the exhibition are related to the Interactive TV game of Fantasy Trivia Quiz. The exhibition takes place across four floors and consists of an assortment of objects which stimulate the senses, engage the mind and expand the imagination. The Fiction Scavenger Hunt takes a number of steps. This is a timed game where teams are given a list of suggested answers to questions in the form of a list of words on the floor of the exhibition. They are then sent to the correct part of the exhibition and given a time limit to find evidence relating to the answer. Puzzle logic There is a prize to the team which has correctly found the evidence and produced a picture of the answer. Doing the Fantasy Trivia Quiz is itself a fun and rewarding activity, but the whole event is built around a number of challenges. The VR experience The VR experience occurs with a screen-based program called Genesys, which the librarians said players can experience up to six times on any given date, but people can watch it as many times as they like. Some of the objects in the exhibition are related to the particular theme of the exhibition. Other objects are used to create the narrative of how this version of reality unfolded. Those who experience the exhibition know when they start a game on the VR screen that the choices they make could affect what happens. Participants also have to make choices based on their own knowledge of History, Space and Time. In one game, for example, it is clear there is conflict in the region between those who support a general and those who support a leader, so you have to decide whether to support one side or the other. "It doesn't matter if you don't know the answer. It's about debating with yourself in your head whether you think it's right or wrong to do this," said one participant. Librarians from the Australian Library and Information Association and the Story Noodle Theatre Company provided literacy support to participants. The Big Bang Theory's Dr Sperber said the exhibition did not or any other such amount... as the court in its discretion determines to be reasonable." Similarly, under the Guidelines, a sentencing court must determine the amount of restitution. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3664 (Supp.1990); United States v. Diamond, 969 F.2d 961, 968 (10th Cir.1992). Under the Mandatory Victims' Restitution Act of 1986, the sentencing court has no discretion as to the restitution amount. Under the Sentencing Guidelines, restitution may be imposed as either a condition of probation or a fine, or both. 18 U.S.C.A. § 3563(b) (Supp.1990); 18 U.S.C.A. § 3664 (Supp.1990); United States v. Thompson, 891 F.2d 507, 510 (4th Cir.1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1005, 110 S.Ct. 1300, 108 L.Ed.2d 477 (1990). The Act does not expressly prohibit court consideration of potential civil litigation, but, as discussed below, it does require the court to determine the amount of restitution based on the actual losses, rather than speculative or theoretical claims. United States v. Pallotta, 923 F.2d 584, 593 (2d Cir.1991). Since the Mandatory Victims' Restitution Act of 1986 was enacted, and its corresponding guideline provisions promulgated, a number of courts have addressed whether a sentencing court can impose a condition of restitution for restitution to be paid to a non-victim under a civil action. These courts have concluded that the trial court cannot do so. In United States v. Caprino, 997 F.2d 1129 (5th Cir.1993), the sentencing court ordered the defendant to make restitution to a medical care provider. The Fifth Circuit observed: We are aware of no authority allowing the imposition of a criminal sentence in order that a defendant may satisfy civil liability. Id. at 1134; see also United States v. Roche, 996 F.2d 300, 304-05 (1st Cir.1993); United States v. Blue, 957 F.2d 106 (4th Cir.1992); United States v. Hill, 932 F.2d 1048 (7th Cir.1991); Thompson, 891 F.2d 507. The Fourth Circuit concluded: The trial court clearly
